I have been with for a long time now and it has come to my attention that you are sending out emails to some people every month or so saying that you have a new version. This is annoying because it doesn't let the user know when the next version is coming. Not saying it is incorrect, it just seems annoying. I think it is not correct to continuously send out emails to people asking for money. I think this is something that should be handled differently. I would really appreciate if you would take this up with the people who are managing the newsletter. Full-featured, programmable DNS server to control your DNS zones, networks, and resolvers to get the latest, most up-to-date answers First and foremost, most of the information in this article is still in Beta. If you notice anything else to add, you can easily comment below and let me know. This article will take you through a step by step process for creating your own DNS client. Note: This process was tested on Ubuntu 16.04 (Xenial). Now let's take a look at the process. We need to start by creating a new file in /etc/ called /etc/dnsmasq.conf. In this file we will add the following lines to it: ## NetBSD-specific examples # local=/dev/eth0 dhcp-range=192.168.178.50,192.168.178.75,255.255.255.0,255.255.255.255 dhcp-option=eth1,netbios-scope The first part of the lines look for the interface eth0. It then sets the interface's MAC address to be the local MAC address, as well as giving the IP address 192.168.178.50 and the mask 255.255.255.0. The second part sets the DHCP range to be 192.168.178.50 to 192.168.178.75. Finally, the last part sets the NetBIOS scope of the server, which is important for Windows clients. Now let's add the dnsmasq daemon to our system. As root, we type the following into a command line terminal: ## Add the dnsmasq daemon to our system # If you haven't added the dnsmasq to your system before, you may need to add a few extra dependencies: ## Install the dnsmasq daemon # sudo apt-get install dnsmasq Now we need to create the directory for our configuration files. ## Create the /etc/dnsmasq.conf directory # sudo mkdir /etc/dnsmasq.conf Now we are going to create a directory in /etc/ called /etc/dnsmasq.d/. ## Create the /etc/dnsmasq.d directory # sudo mkdir /etc/dnsmasq.d Now we are going to create a new file in /etc/dnsmasq.d. ## Create the /etc/dnsmasq.d/dev.conf file # sudo nano /etc/dnsmasq.d/dev.conf In the new file we need to paste the
